Written in 1939, this light-hearted comedy has relevance for today's audience as it takes a look at the private lives of celebrities when they're not on the stage.

Sheridan Whiteside (Tobias Andersen) comes to dinner at the home of the Ohio social couple Mr. and Mrs. Stanley (Scott Malcolm and Jane Fellows) during the Christmas season. Unfortunately for the Stanleys, Sheridan slips and falls on the ice of the homestead steps fracturing his hip. The local doctor (Tim Park), who is also a frustrated playwright, plops him in a wheelchair and the long term patient becomes the house guest from hell. The playwrights have patterned this personality after Alexander Woollcott, a celebrated critic and radio personality known for his wit and worldly manner.

What happens to the Stanleys shouldn't happen to a dog. Whiteside, who gives new meaning to the word curmudgeon, takes over the living room and all sorts of celebrities show up to wish the famous man a joyful holiday. Hart and Kaufman have patterned these folks after famous entertainment figures of the day. Professor Metz (Brian Al-lard), a look alike of Albert Einstein, brings a glass-enclosed miniature city of 10,000 cockroaches; Beverly Carlton (Sammuel Hawkins) comes tap dancing in as a Noel Coward figure; stage star Lorraine Sheldon (Margie Boulé), comes slinking in like Gertrude Lawrence and Banjo (Garland Lyons), a zany comedian resembling Harpo Marx, stops by to visit his old pal and celebrate the holidays. Maggie Cutler (Jill Westerby), Whiteside's personal assistant, manages all the appointments but even she gets frustrated when some ex-convicts get invited to dinner and four penguins unexpectedly show up from Admiral Byrd.

Others in the cast include Ellen Bloodworth, Matt Brown, Daniel Buntin, MaryAnne Glazebrook, Jeff Gorham, Anne Hargreaves, Andy Lee-Hillstrom, Megan Misslin, Christopher Mullens, Cheryl Nelson, Bob Rindt, Alyssa Roehrenbeck, Shea Mackinnon, Cole Jackson and Todd Tschida.
